

Report which is ordered to be recorded to wit: The Commissioners to whom was referred the Report and proceedings of Messrs James M. Parker and Benjamin Lamb two Commissioners appointed by a previous order of Court, to examine and report the most eligible route for a Road and site for a Bridge across Halloway River at, or near, Jerusalem, have examined the same and are of opinion that it will be attended with less expense for the Bridge to remain where it now is, than to move it. The route from Mr. Parker's to the river, they deem perfectly practicable, and would not, they think, be attended with a greater expense than would attend the construction of ordinary new Roads; and although they consider the route on the opposite side of the River not impracticable, they consider it as much more expensive, and more difficult, than would be the entire opening of the new Road to the River, although the distance does not exceed $\frac{1}{2}$ of a mile, owing to the many low places which would necessarily require ditching and caucusing, and the elevation of which a considerable part would have to be raised. They are, therefore, of opinion, that to commence an embankment at the foot of the bridge, where it now stands, and to run thence some 30 or 40 yards into Mr. Vaughan's field, thence, about the same distance nearly parallel with the present road to the distance of about 325 yards, which would carry it beyond the Mill Bridge, would be the better plan. They propose an embankment on a base of 20 feet, 4 feet high, and on the surface 16 feet, would be sufficiently strong and high to resist any ordinary freshet, to which the River at Jerusalem is liable an embankment of the above dimensions would contain 2600 cubic yards, which, they presume, might be constructed for \$4000; in the distance, two bridges would be necessary, which they propose might be built for something like \$60 or 70. The whole expense of the route, here recommended, would not they think, amount to $\frac{1}{2}$ of what would be required to construct a new Road. Which is respectfully submitted. Wm D. Wood. Thos B. Morrell. Mr. M. Nicholson. July 18th 1836. The distance of the new Road from Mr. Parker's to the River is 1 Mile 1452 yards."
